apps and online programs for mental health concerns

There are a number of apps and online programs that can provide you with great information and support you along your journey. While apps and online programs are useful resources to have in your toolkit, they are not intended to replace face-to-face therapy and it may be important to seek further professional support.

let's talk: apps

Breakup Shakeup *

Breakup Shakeup provides support to young people who have recently experienced a relationship break up. The app teaches young people coping strategies and how to re-think negative thoughts, while emphasising the benefits of social supports during recovery.

Daybreak

Developed by Hello Sunday Morning, Daybreak is a personalised app that supports individuals to reclaim control over alcohol consumption and supports the building of healthy habits. The app includes peer support, personalised help and goal setting features.

HeadGear

Developed by Black Dog Institute, HeadGear is a free self-guided app designed to build resilience and wellbeing through daily activities to help you manage stress, improve sleep and overcome difficult situations.

iBobbly

iBobbly is a free social and emotional self-help app developed by Black Dog Institute for young Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Australians. The app provides help when it comes to managing thoughts and feelings and also deciding what is important in life.

Mood Mission

Mood Mission is an evidence based app designed to help you learn better ways of coping with low moods and anxiety. Mood Mission costs $7.99 to download from your App Store.

Smiling Mind

Smiling Mind is a free mindfulness app designed to facilitate daily meditation and mindfulness exercises to reduce stress and anxiety, increase concentration and improve quality of sleep.

Apps can be downloaded from your App Store on Apple and Android devices

*only available from Apple App Store
